Re: Lillian Glass, Ph.D.

To Blogger:

This office represents Lillian Glass, Ph.D., who has been the subject of disparaging, defamatory, and tortious comments on "PogoWasRight's" blog. Such comments were made by you in your "dissent" and by another individual by the name of S [REDACTED] B [REDACTED] who has commented on the blog. She may also be know as "Joley Webber" (unless that is a name which is attributable to you directly).

It is ironic that your blog focuses on privacy rights. Yet, you have violated the privacy rights and other rights of my client by the matters which you have published in your blog.

Your blog is replete with false claims concerning Lillian Glass, Ph.D. I note also that you have closed the thread on both of these blogs in 2009, not even allowing Dr. Glass an opportunity to respond.

Your malice in facilitating and making these publications is evident from your comment that "Google cache is not her friend." You have purposely allowed comments to be published in your blogs, whether by you, or by another, which are false and defamatory in nature, and which are designed to embarrass and hold my client up to ridicule. This has been done improperly and maliciously. For example, the blog asserts that Dr. Glass is not a licensed psychologist and that she consequently is not entitled to give her opinions to the media. Contrary to the assertions made, Dr. Glass, as a media psychologist according to the American Psychological Association and the California Psychology Association, has every right to continue to do what she has been doing for the past two decades. Dr. Glass has not diagnosed anyone. Moreover, she is very much entitled to speak her views about Britney Spears who is a public figure. Specifically, Dr. Glass did not diagnose Britney Spears. Rather, she gave her opinion of all the possibilities which someone who exhibited the actions which Ms. Spears did at that particular time in her life. Dr. Glass handled the media situation responsibly as a seasoned and veteran media psychologist. She is also very well aware of the terms which you minimize. Dr. Glass states: "In my opinion" and references "possibilities", and is very media savvy while staying within the perimeters of the law.

In addition, while you attempted to be clever in the title of the January 18, 2009 blog in referencing the old adage.. "People who live in glass houses shouldn't throw stones," you have urged that Dr. Glass be stoned. This is particularly disturbing since Dr. Glass is an international speaker who speaks in countries where, unfortunately, people are stoned as a form of punishment. You have in essence incited persons with such propensities and have called for Dr. Glass' death, simply because you did not like what she said in the media. Whether you meant this or not, the fact that you have said this in a blog headline is egregious and very troublesome.

In so doing, at the very least, you are causing intentional infliction of emotional distress to Dr. Glass.

Further, several years ago, my client sought out a professional relationship with S [REDACTED] B [REDACTED] Ph.D., during a crisis situation. Dr. B [REDACTED] has chosen to share Dr. Glass' intimate issues through her comments on your blog. You in turn have chosen to publish those comments in your blog, thus compounding an egregious situation. It is my understanding that S [REDACTED] B [REDACTED] Ph.D. now recognizes her error and misjudgment in causing this publication and is desirous of having her comments removed. She also no doubt wrote the "Joley Webber" comments, which contained false information concerning Dr. Glass. My client does not know any "Joley Webber" and certainly would know her name if she had known her for eight years as stated in the blog. In any event, S [REDACTED] B [REDACTED] Ph.D. is in the process of contacting you to remove all comments concerning Lillian Glass, Ph.D. from PogoWasRight.org, a blog, and any other places where it appears. We anticipate that you will comply immediately. This applies to the comments that were attributed to "Joley Webber" which is most likely S [REDACTED] B [REDACTED] Ph.D.

Moreover, you have incited persons reading your blog to complain to the media and to the psychological society about Dr. Glass. For your information, Dr. Glass has two Ph.D.'s (one in Communication Disorders and the other in Psychology, and a post-doctorate in medical genetics, as well as an advanced degree Clinical Hypno-Therapy). Dr. Glass is a highly accomplished individual who has written over fifty (50) publications in professional journals, has taught at a prestigious university, and has also written over fifteen (15) books. You have minimized Dr.

Glass' accomplishments. Your statement that she is practicing without a license in your blog is ridiculous. She chooses not to practice as a Psychologist and has never claimed to be one. However, Dr. Glass does have a Ph.D. in Psychology. Dr. Glass is entitled to give her opinion in the media based upon her knowledge, education, training, and experience. She has educated the public for decades, and she is entitled to continue to do so.

Since you have closed all the threads on these blogs so that no one can respond, there should be no issue in removing the blogs in their entirety at this point. There is no point in keeping them up except to continue to cause malicious harm and emotional distress to my client.

I note also that you have utilized who is Protector, Inc. to improperly hide your identity. In this regard ICANN requires all domain name registrars to publish contact information in the public who is the daatabase. You have failed to do so in an unsuccessful effort to keep your identity secret.

Let me make one thing perfectly clear. Unless these blogs pertaining to Dr. Lillian Glass are taken down immediately, a lawsuit will be forthcoming against you. I trust that a lawsuit will not be necessary.

Sincerely,
